Nationwide in 2007, 53.6% of high school students who went to physical education classes on 1 or more days in an average week when they were in school (i.e., attended physical education classes). Overall, the prevalence of attending physical education classes was higher among male than female students and higher among Hispanic than white students.