Protecting and Improving the Health of DC’s Families

Women and Infants — Using a life course perspective, the District of Columbia (DC) strives to improve the health of women and infants by addressing social determinants of health, implementing systems-level interventions and building collective impact. Current strategies include increasing use of preventive care and reproductive life planning among reproductive age women, with a focus on adolescents; decreasing risks for preterm births, including tobacco use; increasing initiation and duration of breastfeeding; enhancing community support for fathers; and, working with health care and health financing sectors to implement clinical quality improvement initiatives for women and infant health. Key programs include enhanced perinatal case management for women at high risk for adverse birth outcomes; newborn screening (metabolic, hearing and critical congenital heart disease) and care coordination; perinatal oral health outreach and education; and safe sleep education.

Children and Adolescent Health — The Family Health Bureau aims to improve and promote optimal health and quality of life for all District pre-school and school-age children and adolescents, including children and youth with special healthcare needs. The Bureau enhances access to preventive, dental, primary, and specialty care services for all children; provides education and support resources for families; and contributes to the development of a coordinated, culturally competent and family-centered health system. Some of the key programs include: evidence-based home visitation for parents of children from birth to five; centralized information and referral centers to connect children at-risk for developmental delays and disabilities with needed services; school health services including school-based health centers, preventive dentistry, school nursing services, health and sexuality education, and sexual violence prevention programs; support enhanced nutrition and increased physical activity for children and youth; and promotion of recommended vaccines, surveillance and assessments.

Children and Youth with Special Health Care Needs (CYSHCN) — The District of Columbia Title V program provides sub-grants for organizations focused on addressing CYSHCN issues including asthma, transition services and parent navigation. Funding is also allocated to support community organizations, such as the Wendt Center for Loss and Healing to address the behavioral health needs of children and youth affected by trauma. Additionally, Title V provides support for care coordination within DC’s Early Intervention/Part C program.
