Protecting and Improving the Health of Kentucky’s Families

Children with Special Needs — Families may access services for children with special health care needs through 12 regional offices across the state. Direct medical services are provided to children with certain conditions. Nurses and pediatric specialty physicians hold clinic sites in 21 of the state’s 120 counties. Families receive financial support to assist with travel and lodging to attend these clinics or receive hospital services.

Newborn Metabolic Screening — Kentucky expanded the number of conditions included on the metabolic screen from 29 to a total of 49 disorders in 2008. This change puts Kentucky in alignment with the current recommendations from the American College of Medical Genetics and the March of Dimes.

Home Visiting — The Health Access Nurturing Development Services (HANDS) provides home visiting to overburdened first-time families to help them meet the challenges of parenting during the prenatal period and during the child’s first two years of life. HANDS is operational in all 120 Kentucky counties and over 10,000 families have participated a year.

Newborn Hearing Screening — Over 99 percent of Kentucky’s infants receive hearing tests before hospital discharge, regardless of risk factor status.

Local Health Departments — The majority of Title V funding is allocated directly to local health departments to support activities benefiting women and children. Comprehensive prenatal services, including health screening and counseling prior to conception, outreach and follow-up, breastfeeding education and nutrition counseling, pre-term birth prevention screening and education laboratory tests, delivery, and home visits, are available to low-income women.

People Served by the Kentucky MCH Program*
